Discover the only real adventure on a mysterious alien planet: a deadly cold winter temperature! Build a base and survive the winter on a planet whose atmospheric composition is barely known. Uncover the secrets of an expedition from a century ago and decide whether to give up or not. Influence of the cellulose-binding modules of Trichoderma reesei on the growth and virulence of this fungus. The r- and c-domain modules of the cellulase Cel7A from Trichoderma reesei were expressed in Escherichia coli separately. The gene fragment coding for the N-terminal domain was expressed on a plasmid under the control of a nikA promoter. This modification increased the extracellular activity of beta-glucosidase on Avicel at a 1:5 ratio, as compared with the cellulase from the wild type strain. The C-terminal domain fragment was expressed in Lactococcus lactis under the control of a nisA promoter. The presence of recombinant proteins was confirmed in a fraction of the membrane by Western blotting. These proteins could be associated with the cell membrane. In spite of this, a significant decrease of the growth rate of the transformant (L. lactis) and production of the cellulase were observed as compared with the wild-type strain. The results were confirmed by the expression of a fusion protein between c- and r-domains in a L. lactis strain. The transformant displayed an alteration of cellulase activity, whereas the growth rate was also affected. These data suggest that the cellulase module could bind strongly to the cell wall in the mutant strain. The fused protein was partially secreted in the culture medium and localized in the cell wall, as inferred from the immunodot blotting experiments. Cell death and concomitant formation of necrotic zones was observed in the presence of the purified protein. Western blotting and Southern blotting experiments identified the gene mutated in L. lactis and the position of the insert in the phage genome.class SimpleCookie [{:value => [arg1, arg2], :expires =>
