Mega Overload is a 3D strategy game that allows you to control military laser units. You can play solo, but you also have the option to play as part of a team. Every team has a preset number of units and once you reach the number of strikes of that team you will be kicked out of the game.

Some tips when playing:

- You only have 3 units to use, so choose wisely which ones you want to use more often. It is best to use ground-level, low-range, heavy-armored troops.
- If you are on a team, use it to start the game.
- Each strike is 1 round of the game and you must kill 1 enemy unit per round. The aim of the game is to keep your team alive as long as possible.
- You won't be deleting saves on your computer, so make sure that you have a backup strategy.

Mega Overload VR is a VR Sports Fight game on PlayStation VR and Oculus Quest. Reconstruction of soft tissue defects with the in situ free neurocutaneous flap using a reconstruction algorithm. All soft tissue defects after face and neck surgery require reconstruction. Local, regional, and free flaps are being increasingly used to reconstruct soft tissue defects in the head and neck. The in situ free neurocutaneous flap is a versatile flap that can be used in a wide variety of head and neck reconstructions. The authors reviewed 30 in situ free neurocutaneous flaps to identify the indications, advantages, and disadvantages of the flap in their reconstructive algorithm. The neurocutaneous islands were based on the superficial temporal vessels, and the facial cutaneous islands were based on the deep temporal vessels. The soft tissue island was dissected along with the facial cutaneous island. The island and the surrounding skin were closed in a sandwich technique, and the hair was allowed to grow. The length of the island was based on the defect. The defect was reconstructed with a combination of the in situ free neurocutaneous flap and local flaps. The island had a length of at least 8 cm, and a width of at least 4.5 cm. The reconstructions were placed at the donor site of the in situ free neurocutaneous flap. In 32 cases, the in situ free neurocutaneous flap was used as a pectoralis major island flap and in 2 cases as a pectoralis minor island flap. In 1 patient, the neurocutaneous island was used as a sole flap. The long pedicle and double cutaneous territories of the island enabled large island-to-defect sizes. The island was harvested easily with minimal donor-site morbidity. The large flap bed allowed for reconstruction of the defects with considerable detail. The patients had good function of the reconstructed areas and a high level of satisfaction with the results of the reconstructions. Their results showed that the in situ free neurocutaneous flap is a safe and reliable flap for reconstruction of soft tissue defects of the face and neck. In conclusion, the in situ free neurocutaneous flap is a versatile flap that allows reconstruction of a wide variety of defects of the face and neck. What's new:

system has a scary setup, and no weekends away Following the murder of Andrew Rollins in a taxi in July 2015, a video surfaced of a man shooting and killing a cabbie. The name of the killer wasn't released by police at the time, but as the investigation into the murder progressed, the man's identity emerged as Chris Lopez. And it turned out, he had a VR headset and comfortable seat in his house. The detectives sent Lopez a message through Facebook. They offered him a lie-detector test and a deal, but he wasn't having it. He started shooting the cops on his front lawn, killing one of them in the head. There's another death on our hands? Meanwhile, Jason Johnson, man with an AR-15, held traffic on the freeway as a decoy. Zachary Marderosian, a member of the homegrown terrorist group The New California Republic, was arrested and charged with a plot to bomb a shopping mall in Oakland. But what if these things weren't just random? What if they're part of an organized mega-plot to kill hundreds of people in the US, or even more in Europe? The Global Virtual Reality OC put on the VR system, "Megoverload." Now, it's time for me to plug in and experience it in my own kitchen. I had a seat on the couch In my home office, I had a VR seat. It was a personal VR setup. No third-party controllers were plugged in. No add-on controllers. Just me. It looked like a normal high-end VR system. Between my chair and the screen, an invisible force field of cables. I was looking at a giant screen, because for $3500, I wanted to see. Maybe it was just a big TV. It's got HDMI and Component jacks. I put the headset on. There was a Netflix logo. I pressed the power button. Scrolling text popped in and out of existence. I reached to control it. To the left of me, the power cable was on the table. To the right of me, I could see a beach, with a boat in the background. I said, "Turn off the power." No response. The screen still powered on. I said again. It didn't go
