There is no tomorrow is a third-person action adventure combining stealth and action-adventure / survival horror elements in an admittedly successful way. In the game you play as an amnesiac man who just woke up in a big city that he doesn't recognize. The only thing he knows is that he is being chased and pursued. You have the ability to turn invisible and you should really try to use this ability every time you get the chance. After some time you might find out that your life is in danger and it's your job to start running and try to escape the danger. Finding out what happened to you while being in this city could be also another point to pay attention to, as there are pretty weird things going on here. There is a good dark story along this game. You are gonna play it twice... that is guaranteed. "I've always enjoyed story-driven RPGs and this game definitely falls into that genre. The storyline is very interesting and the fact that it comes with multiple endings is definitely a plus as it puts more pressure on players to play the game in a certain way to get the outcome that they want. The combat in the game is also another thing that I really enjoy in the game." IGN Southeast Asia "There is no tomorrow" is a third-person action adventure combining stealth and action-adventure / survival horror elements in an admittedly successful way. This is a genuine result of a creator who is not afraid to experiment with gameplay that may initially seem repetitive in the gaming industry." JustGamer "There is a really good dark story along this game. Creepy creatures, decent mechanics, interesting characters such as the doll character you will meet in the game. A lot of endings to experience depending on the choices you made throughout the game." News May 17, 2011 There is a tournament between the top 3 players right now on this game, I'm not one of them, but it's awesome to see how people are going about making their character. I hope to get to play this game sometime in the near future.Enzymatic synthesis of phytic acid-glycerol ester-rich nanoemulsions as potential delivery systems. Emulsions are widely used as delivery systems for food and pharmaceutical applications. They are often more effective as delivery systems than simple mixtures of the active compounds with a carrier. In this study, the synthesis of phytic acid glycerol ester-rich nanoemulsions was evaluated in terms of their production and physicochemical stability. The emulsions were characterized according to their droplet size, polydispersity index (PI), zeta potential, chemical composition and microstructure. The synthesized emulsions showed sizes ranging from 121.8 to 250.2 nm, PI values from 0.13 to 0.22, and high surface areas from 7 to 11 m²-g⁻¹. The emulsions produced with lecithin and tristearin as emulsifiers had higher levels of protein and fatty acid contamination. All of the emulsions tested presented satisfactory physicochemical stability (physical, chemical and microbiological) at 4 °C over 1 year, which was attributed to the high steric and electrostatic barriers between droplets. The presence of phytic acid improved the emulsification capacity of lecithin and tristearin compared to simple emulsions produced without the addition of phytic acid. The encapsulation efficiency of the phytic acid and glycerol ester-rich nanoemulsions was high (86.5 ± 0.6%) and stable over the storage period. The emulsions exhibited a good potential for the encapsulation of actives, being promising candidates for the encapsulation of lip by Deborah Park In 'Travelling Light' we see the brothers in their one and only black and white episode, 'Alive'. The black one is captured and they send up a distress signal. This is a familiar storytelling trope in books and Tv to both the horror of the unknown and the longing for love. Living in a tiny studio flat, for the brothers the home is a strange mix of unorder and necessary. A moody place, with swimming pool water the only colour highlight. For the cat we get sometimes more, sometimes less colour, according to whatever mood we are in. Travelling together, the brothers take many places. The show acknowledges how in travelling alone we take on a state of being that may change as we travel for better or worse or even the opposite. Why not pink, yellow or turquoise? What if green and white is better than blue and white in a room? How might the absence of colour contribute to freshness? Unlike the cat, which has a home and a body, the traveller has only a new body and where it goes and what it does depends very much on the moods of the people he or she finds. In 'Colours from the Heart', seven different blues are explored for their emotional value. Here we see each of the seven blues, from the one that makes us feel happy through to the blues that trigger tears. These are all the blues of nature - of the blueprints of the Great big web of life. To the colour that represents beauty, love, life and hope, to the blues where we find the closure we seek. But maybe all we really need is one colour, maybe it is the Yellow Heart Heartbearthat makes us feel the truest sense of what it is to be alive - the colour of life.

What's new:
