Quality of life aspects of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease patients in Greece. Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) is a major public health problem. Quality of life (QOL) has important implications in the evaluation of the prognosis and treatment of patients with COPD, but it is not usually taken into consideration in clinical trials, and only a few published studies evaluated the patients' QOL. The objective of this study is to evaluate the QOL of Greek patients with COPD with respect to functional state, coping mechanisms and health-related quality of life. This study had a cross-sectional design. Patients were recruited from the outpatient unit of Pulmonary Disease Unit, "NIKI" University General Hospital (Athens, Greece). A total of 68 patients with severe to very severe COPD (GOLD classification stage 4 or 5), aged 55.2 +/- 7.7 years (mean +/- SD), and a minimum of two visits in the last 3 months were included. All patients underwent a comprehensive assessment during the last visit (mean value of visits 3.7 +/- 1.7). Clinical evaluation included the determination of the forced expiratory volume in one second (FEV(1)), the forced vital capacity (FVC), and the arterial blood gas analysis. COPD Assessment Test, St. George Respiratory Questionnaire, and SF-36 Health Survey were employed to evaluate the QOL, coping mechanisms, and health status. Mean FEV(1) was 2.1 +/- 0.9 l (median 2.0), and mean FVC was 2.8 +/- 1.1 l (median 2.7), whereas the mean PaO<sub>2</sub> value was 53.8 +/- 10.8 mmHg and the mean PaCO<sub>2</sub> value was 45.3 +/- 4.8 mmHg. The mean CAT score was 21.4 +/- 5.1, while the mean SQOL score was 62.4 +/- 18.9. The mean St. George Respiratory Questionnaire score was 38.5 +/- 17.4, while the mean Physical Functioning (PF) and Role Physical (RP) scores were 20.0 +/- 8.1 and 37.2 +/- 12.0, respectively. The mean Mental Functioning (M) and Role Emotional (RE) scores were 40.0 +/- 11.5 and 46.0 +/- 11.3, respectively, whereas the mean Social Functioning (SF) score was 53.1.

Renal metabolites associated with susceptibility to cadmium toxicity in fed and fasted rats. Renal exposure to cadmium may contribute to the development of nephrotoxic disease, but it is less well established whether the renal handling of cadmium is a contributing factor to the pathogenesis of cadmium-induced nephropathy. Using nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy, we have determined the renal metabolite response to 0, 40 or 200 ppm cadmium in diet. We also studied the effects of food deprivation on the concentration of cadmium and associated renal metabolites, because it is well known that in fasting there is a strong induction of renal metabolism. Male Wistar rats were divided into two groups and fed a diet containing either 0, 40, or 200 ppm cadmium for 5 days. After this period the rats were fed their regular diet. On the day following the final exposure, urine and renal tissue samples were taken and the tissue frozen. To determine the concentration of cadmium in the renal tissue, it was freeze-dried and the cadmium content determined using atomic absorption spectrometry. The renal metabolites 2-pyrrolidone-5-carboxylic acid and an unknown compound (6.5 ppm) as well as a number of amino acids increased with increasing exposure to cadmium in both the fed and fasted states. Although some of the metabolites were relatively specific to cadmium, none were specific to fasting or exposure to cadmium. In conclusion, the response of renal metabolites to cadmium in the fed state is similar to the response to fasting in terms of changes in urinary pH and metabolites in some cases. However, we were unable to identify any specific fasting response to cadmium that might be correlated to the nephrotoxic response.

----- Introduction ----- LibXiph is a lightweight, highly portable, fast, highly compatible and ABI compatible C library providing a MPEG-4 compliant alternative to the libavformat/libavcodec libraries. LibXiph is intended as a replacement to the `xiph.org` __ multimedia libraries (for C and C++ applications) in all applications where the Media Framework is an option. The code is mainly based on the C99 subset of ISO/IEC 9899:2011 with C++ stylistic changes.
