Blu-Ray Part One 09/10/2016.Renal microvascular responsiveness to angiotensin II is augmented in a rat model of protein-energy malnutrition. In addition to inducing hypertension, angiotensin II (ANG II) stimulates renin release, increases glomerular hypertension and proteinuria, and induces hypertrophy of renal glomerular and interstitial cells in experimental models of hypertension. In the present study, the effects of ANG II on glomerular microvascular pressure and permeability were assessed using micropuncture techniques in order to determine whether ANG II-induced changes in glomerular hemodynamics and hypertrophy occur in rat models of protein-energy malnutrition (PEM) and dietary salt intake. PEM was induced in male Sprague-Dawley rats by reducing the dietary intake of protein to 7.5% of the normal intake or by increasing the dietary sodium intake to 500 meq/24 h. Sodium restriction or a high dietary sodium intake had no effect on baseline glomerular hemodynamics or on glomerular pressure and pressure filtration relationship curves, as measured by micropuncture. ANG II produced significant increases in glomerular capillary pressure and significant decreases in filtration rate and filtration pressure. The pressor response to ANG II was greater in both salt restriction and sodium-restricted PEM rats than in control animals. In addition, the ability of ANG II to reduce filtration rate and to lower filtration pressure was more pronounced in both types of PEM rats. Hypertonic saline infusion caused a greater increase in glomerular capillary pressure in PEM rats than in control rats. ANG II and hypertonic saline infusion caused a greater decrease in glomerular filtration rate and filtration pressure in PEM rats compared with control animals.(ABSTRACT TRUNCATED AT 250 WORDS)The present invention relates to a cam follower for slidingly engaging a cam surface of a camshaft, more particularly, a roller follower, where the cam follower comprises a conical bushing having a plurality of cutouts which circumferentially open into the peripheral surface of the bushing and on which a plurality of ball bearing surfaces are arranged and a corresponding plurality of roll
