domain or subdomain to send email to a different relaying or delivery service than the one in which you store incoming email messages. Setting Up The Domain You can configure incoming email for your domain to be delivered to a system at your ISP's corporate email hoster, for example, or to a different mailing domain, such as a personal email address. To create the outgoing mail server, follow these steps: In the domain's DNS zone for the relevant mta record, enter the data shown in the following examples. This one records incoming mail for the domain for delivery to one of your ISP's mail servers: Incoming: sendmail.corp.domainname.com Recipient: mail.isp.corp.domainname.com This one records incoming mail for the domain for delivery to a mailbox at a separate domain name: Incoming: distingy.domainname.com Recipient: diggy.domainname.com Note - Some MTA implementation might require you to have a localhost MX record at your ISP's mail server, instead of a remote MX record. This is the case for sendmail MTA, for example. A MX record tells the MTA that a specified hostname is an alternate address for the domain or subdomain you are configuring to deliver email to this machine. If you don't have a localhost MX record at your ISP's mail server (instead of the remote MX record you want to use), you can't use sendmail. You can use the generic MAIL FROM: syntax, with or without the @domainname.com part, to tell sendmail to use an alternate address. Note: Before configuring incoming email to deliver email to a mailbox at your ISP's mail server, you should make sure that you have signed up and paid for access to your mail server. The domain name you use for 04aeff104c
